Elisabeth Badinter is a professor of philosophy. She questions not the existence of maternal love but the existence of maternal instinct.

«In Badinter's () view, however, the instinct is simply an oppressive fiction. In another 200 years, she says with a chuckle, men may have taken over so much of child rearing that people will talk about a paternal instinct. "Like the maternal instinct in its day", she says, "paternal instinct is a taboo waiting to be born, criticized and killed".»
